The author of the website is an art director and designer and therefore true to his skills the portfolio website is not only functional and showcases their work and contact information but is also very visually attractive despite using mostly black and white and simple fonts throughout the website. The author adds links to his instagram posts, their art gallery, their photography shoots and their projects throughout the website. The about me page is the home page and incorporates a calendar showcasing their work and when they worked on it.

Tina, the author of the above showcased website is a software engineer and youtuber, matching my aspiring profile and manages to showcase all about herself in this website. Even though this is not a professional website she manages to showcase her web development skills through simplicity. I really love her choice of color palette and how all her social profiles are part of the nav bar with relevant icons for each contact. I also loved her choice of including a recommendations/favorites page where she talks about the books and tv shows she enjoyed.

The author of this website is a professional frontend Web Developer and he clearly states this underneath the “J” logo of the website coloured in tik-tok themed red and cyan. I loved the practicality of this website and how they had an animation of the languages and tools they’ve worked with alongside a writeup of their description. Their skills page was short and to the point in relevance to the positions they are working in or have worked in the past. Their contact me page was the best, in the sense that the user could send the author an email from within the website without having to open their own email account. The google maps overview of where theyve worked and lived was a nice touch.
